BEHIND THE ROSE-TINTED GLASS

Here in Kairos Works, all of us love stories. Love stories in particular. The ones that will put a smile on our faces.

Why?

Well, we'll always remember the first time we fell in love. The butterflies in our belly, the warm blush on our cheeks, the loud beating of our heart. Those were the times when everything seemed beautiful, seeing the world through rose-colored glasses.

We always feel that we are the luckiest team in the world for having this job, helping couples in love preparing for their wedding day, and listening to the happy stories of their relationships is one of the best parts of it.

So here we would like to share with you their happy stories through this magazine. Stories about life behind the rose-colored glasses. We hope that their stories will have the same effect on you as they did to us.

lots of love,

But here, we have 3 stories that prove them otherwise. 3 couples with characters so different, yet here they are, telling the wonderful stories of their relationship.

THE AWKWARD LEGO BLOCKS

words by Irene Limanto

To some people, first impressions stick.
To others, they're merely a FIRST impression.

Julia was introduced to Cliff in Ikkousha by a mutual friend (which was their matchmaker by proxy). Cliff and Julia was no different. Awkward first date.

The classic. The movie theater~

No. It's not what you think. Cliff didn't pretend to yawn and wrap his arms around Julia. It's a tad more awkward than that. They were going to watch the movie Habibi Ainun with another friend. Unfortunately, the theater was packed that day, so they had to sit separate! On their first date!

'At first, he was totally not my type. My type of guy is tall, tanned, and has a little bit of edge on his appearance. But I got guy who's pale-white, petite for a guy's size, and a baby face.'

But all first impressions aside, they clicked in every way like lego blocks, which happens to be one of their favorites by the way. And that's all that matters!

“they clicked in every way like lego blocks.”

story of Jonni & Fanny

THE MAGNET COUPLE

words by Artha the

photos by Artha The

If there is anything that I have to tell you about this amazing couple, is that they remind me about how magnets work.

Jonni and Fanny are like the positive and negative poles of a magnet, so different but they always attract each other, or stuck in some ways.

Jonni is a person of silence. Just being with him makes you feel the breeze at the top of the mountain of Tibet. So quite, calm, serene, without a word. Everything will be so..... so.... quiet. :D

Fanny, on the other hand, she's like a beach in the Summer, filled with music, joy, sports and sweat, dogs barking, and the laughter of people playing frisbee.

But this is why I love them so much, they're just perfect as a couple! Like a harp and a drum, a drizzle and a typhoon, a ballet and a Rock & Roll, a smile and a laughter, a bass and a soprano, etc. You know what I mean. And that's them! Everything is just so different but what a perfect harmony!

What makes me wonder is how could they fall for each other? How can these two people find a balance in their hearts? Every person always tries to find an equivalence right? From the very beginning, harmony is made by different qualities. You need someone to cheer you up when you cry. You need someone who wants to walk with you when you are tired to run. You need someone to make you fly when your feet are stuck on the ground, and you need someone to take you back down to earth when you fly too high.

So they find these differences quite interesting and made the curious about each other, just like when Adam met Eve for the first time, Prince Charming met Cinderella, Jack Dawson met Rose Dewitt Bukater, Ron met Hermione and so on and so forth.

So I know in a relationship, most of the times, people search for things in common to make sure that everything will work properly. But time had proven that differences make relationship stronger.

“everything is just so different but what a perfect harmony!”

story of Peter & Resy

LOVE UNDERSTANDS THE UNSPOKEN

words by Artha the

Love speaks with different languages. It understands the unspoken. It knows what floats inside our mind. It sees what's hidden behind the wall and can feel the deepest feeling in the corner of the heart.

We commonly say everything that must be spoken out loud, so we can understand all the feelings we have and the attentions we bring. We are not God who can see through the hearts. But love, itself, is the language of God. When you're deeply in love, silence speaks louder than words.

This is the message that I got from Peter and Resy. When we assisted them through their engagement and wedding preparations, I noticed what a fun couple they are! Resy is the typical calm and sweet girl and Peter is a really playful guy and very unique. I must say, when I first met Peter, he was never serious about anything most of the times, and most of our conversations were all jokes and more jokes. I'm that kind of person too, so I can relate :D. But compared to the calmer and sweet Resy, sometimes I wonder how this unique combination works. This was still a mystery until we photographed their prewedding in a tropical island of Nusa Penida, Bali.

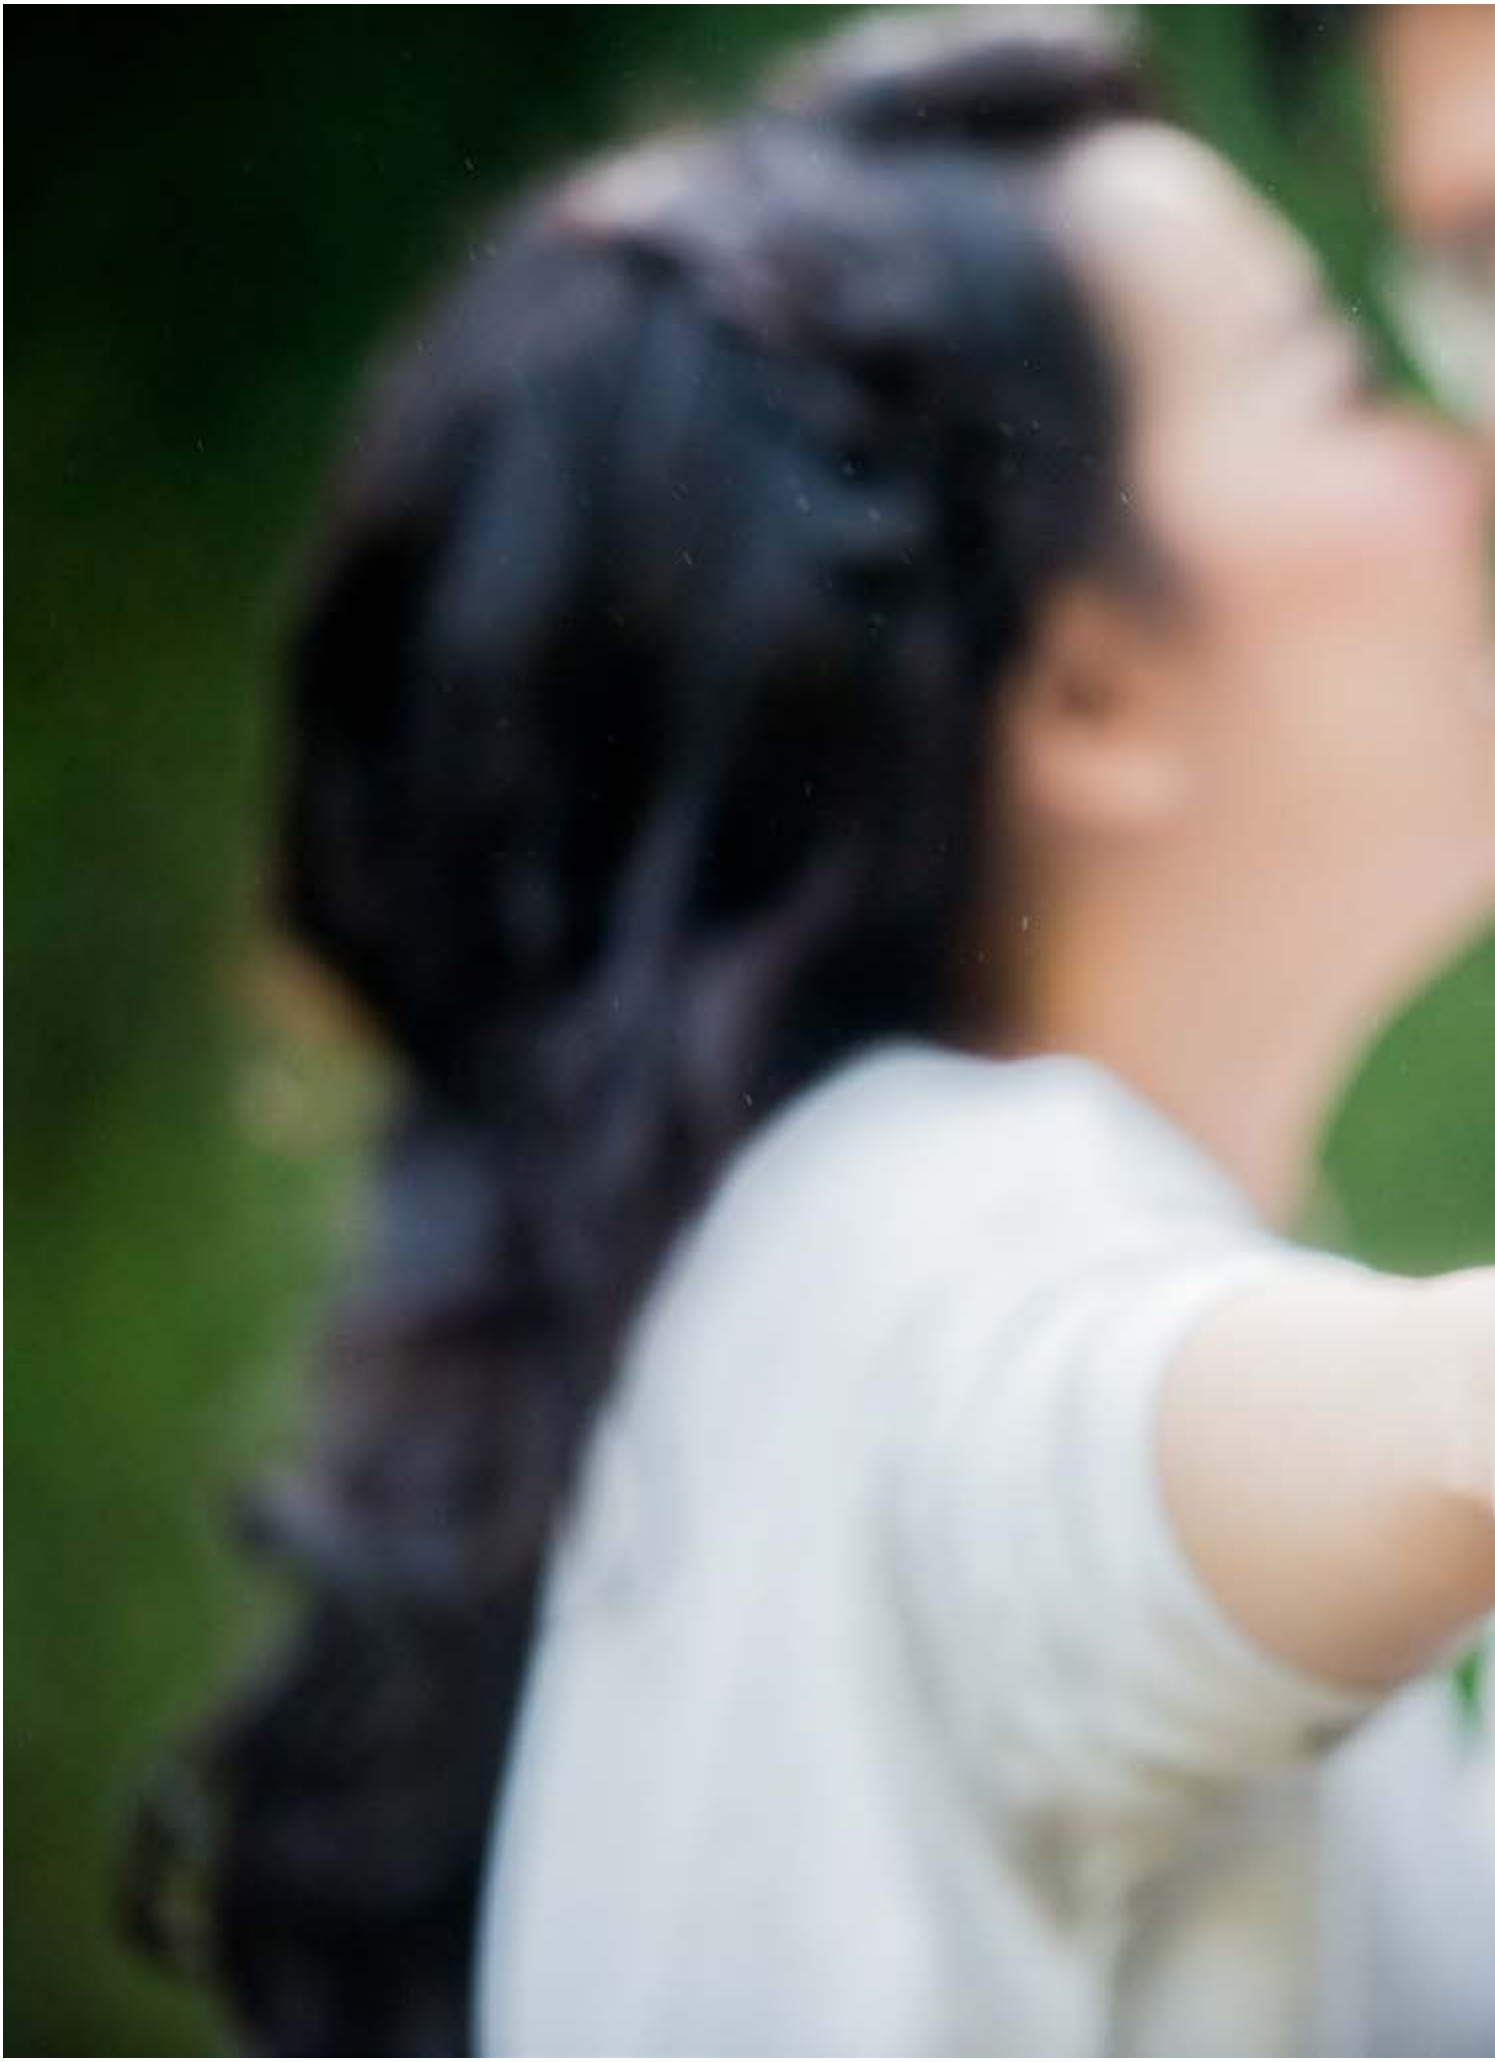

So during our break time, I asked Resy about this, and about how fun their relationship is as Peter can make her feel happy everyday with the unlimited amount of jokes he tells every single minute. But Resy answered me with a more heartfelt answer. She said, "I am not only happy when we're together, I feel special as well. I know most of the time, he can be such a joker and can never be serious. But every time I have a problem, he can turn serious and becomes extremely caring. He is the only person that can calm me down and make me forget about all my problems.

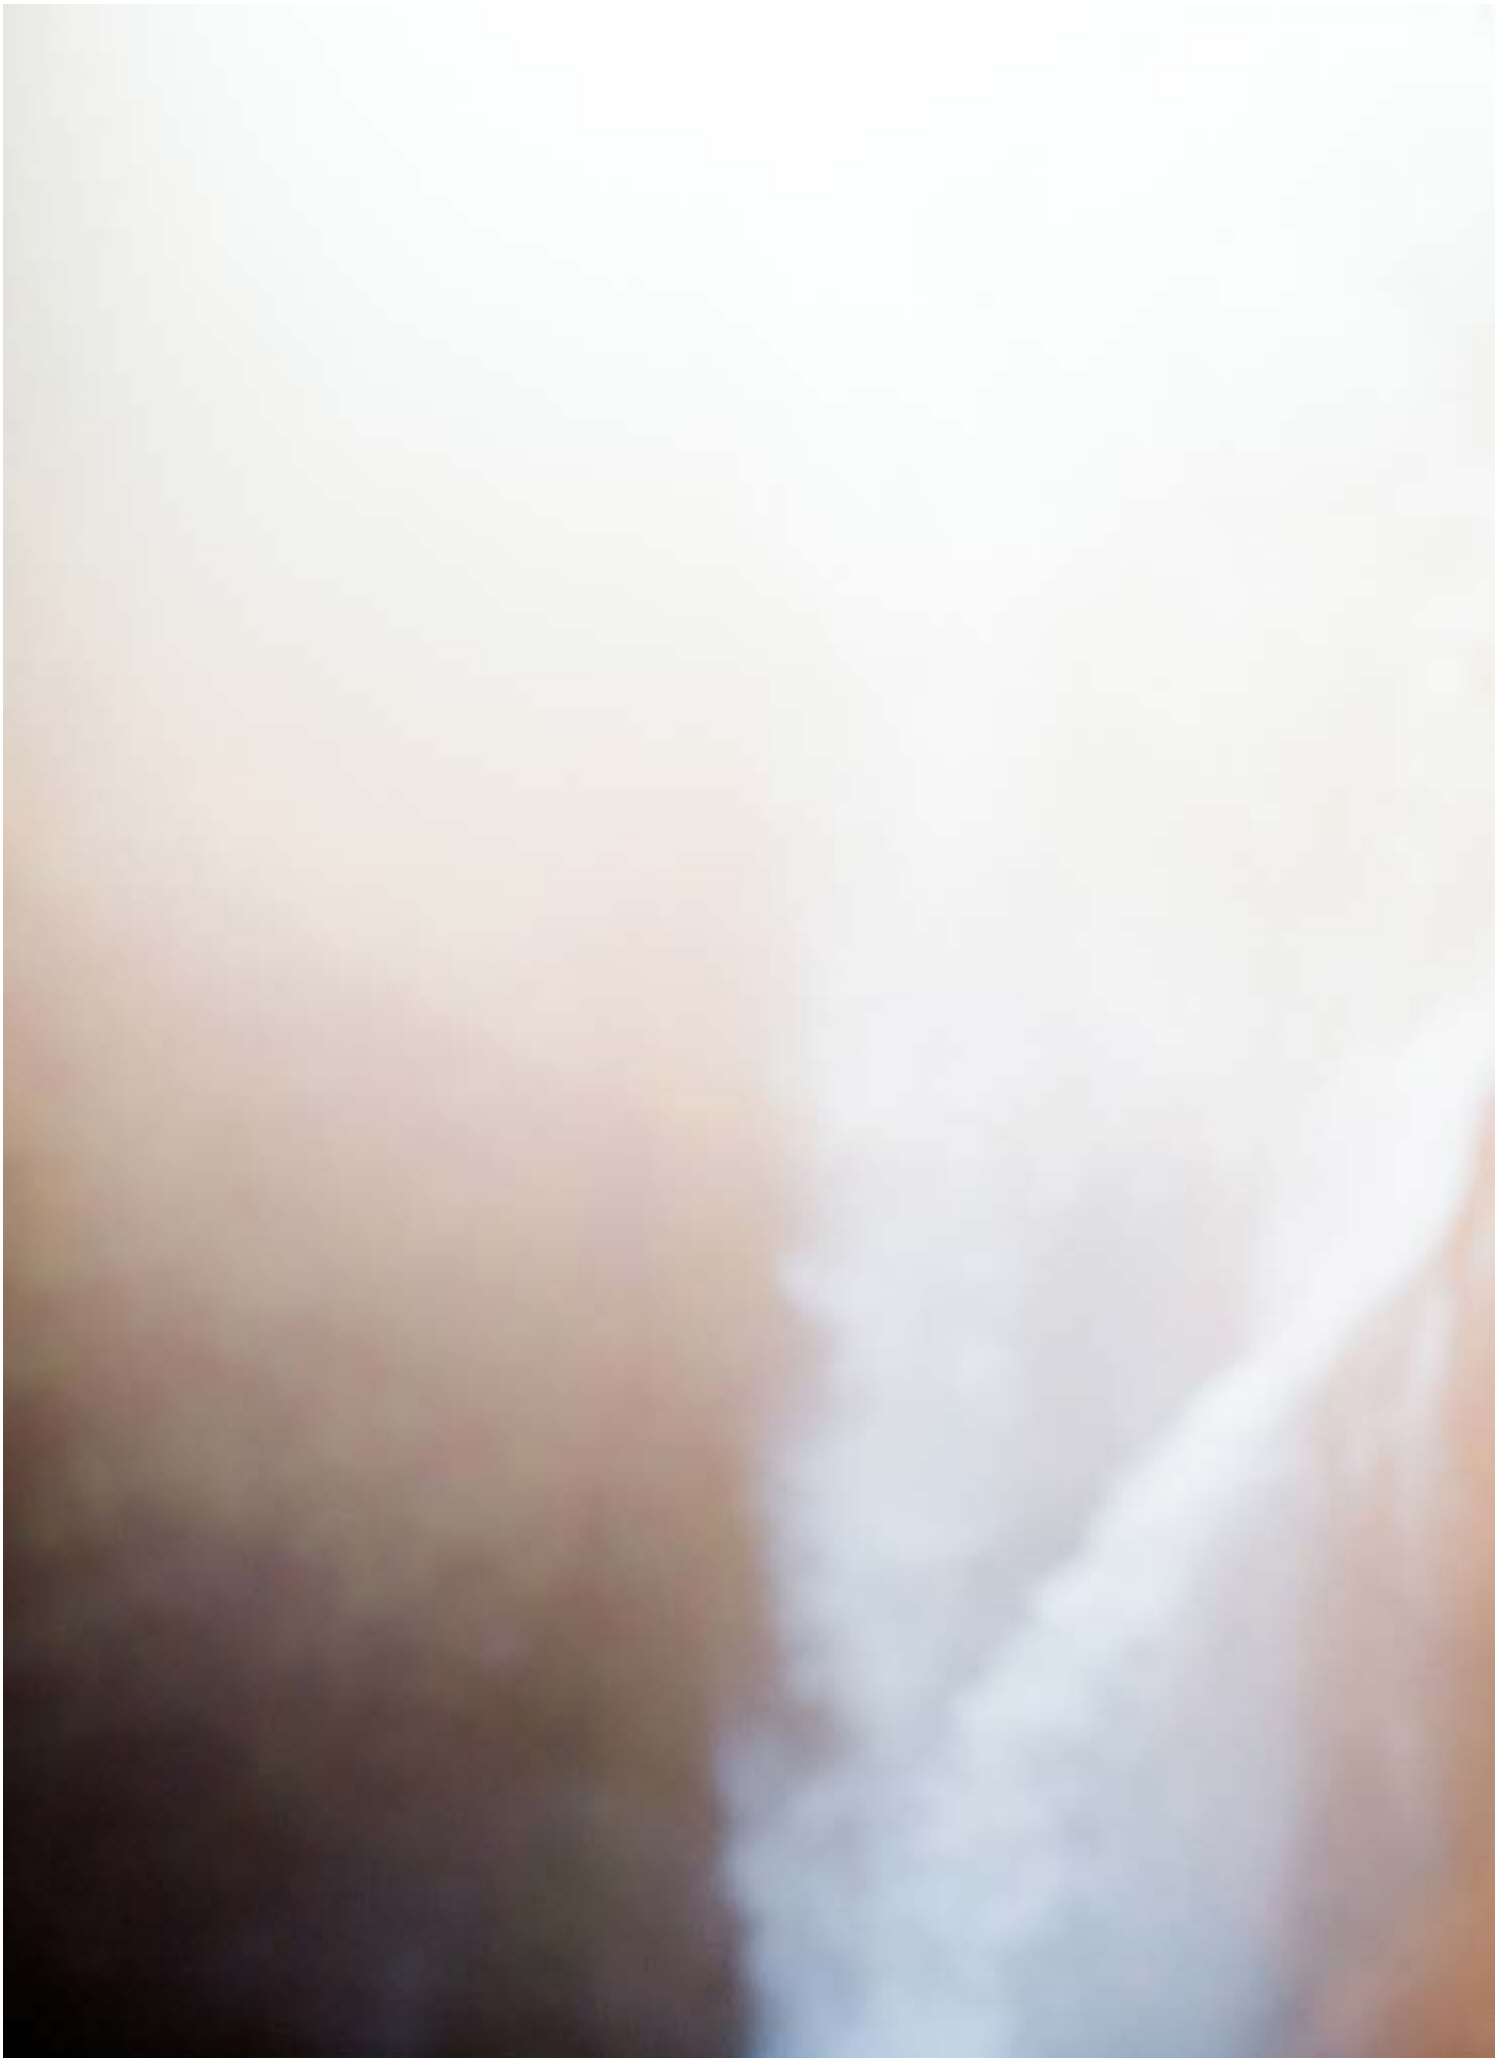

I remember one thing. I once had problem with someone, and it made me very angry and crazy. Peter called me on the phone to calm me down. Meanwhile, he was in Moscow, and he could care less about the high international call rates and called me until his phone ran out of battery. This is why he always wins my heart. You know, the world is so much better these days, and there are lots of people or places that can make you feel really happy, but this man, he can make me feel happy and special at the same time."

When I heard that answer, I suddenly got the point. Love speaks in different languages. It understands the unspoken. It knows what floats inside our mind. It sees what's hidden behind the walls and can feel the deepest feeling in the corner of the heart. And this is the only language God speaks through us, His beloved creature.

“...but this man,
he can make me feel happy and special at the same time.”

Dear Newly-Wedded-Husband,

The last time I wrote to you, we were on opposite ends of the world, waiting for the news of when we would we see each other again. Today, I am writing to you, as you are standing right in front of me getting ready for work?

It all started with a random chitchat and a soft-baked chocolate chip cookie. Which led to eight years of roller coaster rides. With tons of airport hello hugs and goodbye kisses.

Seconds before our first time being apart, which was kind of right after our first anniversary, with a river of tears streaming down my eyes, I asked you what would happen to our relationship. What would we do. You stared deep into my eyes. So very calmly you replied, "I will wait for you. For as long as I have to."

"Ha! Yea right!" a laughter from pessimistic voice inside my head. "That's what they all say."

Funny, how life works. I used to vow to myself that I would never get involved in a long-distance relationship. It's such a challenge, It's a ton of work. It'll never last. And so on and so on. I guess never say never, huh?

Two years went by. And we were still, miles apart. Everyday I tried to convince myself that it would all be over soon. It was one of the most heart crushing moments in my life to not know when I would be seeing you again. But you, so very bravely and selflessly, flew halfway around the world, not thinking about whether it was your first plane ride and the fact that you suffered from panic disorder

Though we haven't really seen each other that much, eight years' worth of story is a lot of story to tell. And I can't possibly retell it in a single letter. If I do, it'll be miles and miles of pages long. But I guess what I'm trying to say in this letter is thank you! Thank you for believing and trusting in me for all these years.

Thank you for accepting my odd self. I know that I can be a handful or two at times, but regardless, you're still there for me in my biggest laughter and my heaviest teardrops. Thank you for making me believe that love conquers all, even at times when it seemed like all odds were against us. Most of all, thank you for being who you are. You are still that sweet selfless man that I met eight years ago. All the little things you do just to crack a little smile on my face.

I thank God everyday for blessing me with a man like you. Thank you for waiting for me for YEARS, and making it possible!

Dear Newly-Wedded-Husband, I can't promise that things will get easier. But I can promise you that I'll be there by your side. I will love you when the goings get tough, hold you when you feel like you're not enough, and give you everything I have. I promise to be your travel companion, and your partner in the kitchen.

And now, we will have no more goodbyes. Just goodnights.

Love,
Your newly wedded wife

words by Nelly

photos by Amel Leo

I once believed in one love, once, for a lifetime. So I wanted to only date once in my life and get married. Unfortunately, I wasn't that lucky. In reality, creating love is not that easy. It seemed like I was so naive back then.

I once believed in one love, once, for a lifetime. So I wanted to only date once in my life and get married. Unfortunately, I wasn't that lucky. In reality, creating love is not that easy. It seemed like I was so naive back then.

Being broken hearted by one love to another have taught me that there won't be anyone who will match with us 100%. Thinking back lately, there is nothing that I regret from every relationship that I have been through. I have been molded and I have learned about humility and duty with every relationship I've ever been through.

The first time I met Yohan, he was a new comer at the church. We exchanged hellos, introduced ourselves and became friends. I was in a relationship at that time, so there's no way that I would think towards the line of a serious relationship.

Looking from my relationship history, I won't fall in love with somebody that I just meet. Everything starts with years and years of friendship. And maybe you'll fall in love in the midst of your friendship journey and that takes years.

In the beginning of getting to know someone, I think everyone's packages appears to be good. It's always been a homework for me to search for flaws in someone who will be my partner. When I've decided to date someone, I've always wanted to know more about them. How terrible is it when you're in a bad mood and when you have a different opinion than me? That curiosity that I'm trying to look for is not to make fun of them, but to know how far can I accept their flaws.

To me, love is when i see their flaws and I still choose to love them. Of course we will accept their strengths, even more, we're proud of them. But what happens when you discover their flaws? Furthermore, when they have different opinions, then what happens? Demanding changes will happen. The demander is stressed out, the demanded is stressed out as well. Fight after fight, nothing is resolved. Then… a breakup? Find another, a more perfect one? There will be none! So we learn to accept their strengths, flaws, everything. The whole package.

A lot of people say, after marriage, you'll be surprised that their flaws will only start emerging. Because a lot of people have warned us and told us their stories, of course we learn to be better and be prepared for the worse.

A moment that I'll never forget is when we just started dating and I went to Yohan's house. After a while, Yohan offered me some food.

Y: Are you hungry? There are breads on the table. Just take them.

I immediately ran to the kitchen and looked for the bread.

Me: They're not here.

Y: Really? They're there between the plastic bags.

I told him once again that it wasn't there.

Hr came immediately and said while pointing towards the plastic bags, "What's this?"

Me: Well yeah bread.

Y: Alright then eat it.

Me: But it's not a whole bread (in my heart I was saying, "The breads have been torn and there are bite marks, and you offered them to me? When I said there aren't any breads it was because there are no whole ones that I can take to eat).

Y: Well it's ok. Just try all of them.

Me: That's ok. Thank you. Maybe later (I was talking with a smile, but in my heart I was saying, "OMG! What a disgusting boy! Unhygienic! Help!!)

Lately, I've been seeing the culture of his family. Sharing. What they were trying to do tearing some pieces off the breads was so that the other family members have the opportunity to try them as well. For example, when buying bread, they'll buy 10 different types of bread and every family member can try everything. As for my family, we'll just buy enough for everyone. We can only choose one and you can't be greedy, give the remaining whole breads to the other family members.

Saul

It's still considered sharing. There's no right or wrong. We talked about this together and came up with a conclusion. We can still share. You can buy plenty if you want everyone to sample them all. But cut them first, ok? With a knife. So you can still share and you won't feel disgusted. And they can try them all together even at the same time.

That was one of our dating experiences. If there's something that you don't agree with, we'll find a win-win solution. We have to find a way to make it work.

A lot of the times, we are products of our own family with our own traditions. We learn to not blame and demand. We'll make a new tradition for the family that we'll build.

It's not an easy thing to do. But we're all humans who still have imperfections and flaws. Even until today, we are still learning. We depend on God, a lot.

When we were still dating, to us, it was the time to open our eyes wide to get to know our future partner. Don't only be engulfed by their strengths. Find out about their flaws. Are we ready to accept their flaws? Can we tolerate them forever?

When our vows have been said, it's time to close your eyes and accept them for who they are, completed by their strengths and flaws. Close our eyes from looking at their mistakes and flaws. Just remember their kindness and positive aspects

Together Forever

story of Young & Feby

LOVE IS NOT ALL ABOUT GIVING

words by Artha The

photos by Artha The

Love is addictive, yes it is. When we are falling in love, we enter a new dimension of world where life keeps amuse us with a new habit to give, and to care. And this is the time when we feel we don't lose anything at all even though we giving out so much.

Young & Feby, I met this interesting couple when we captured their best friend's wedding in Bali, where Feby was one of the bridesmaids. After that, we shared many things, especially when we did their prewedding session in Melbourne, they told us about how love touched them in an amazing way.

They worked in the same company in Singapore, where Young realize that Feby is a very special girl. Although Feby was raised in a different culture that he commonly knew, but Feby is a very hardworking person. She can be childish sometimes but Young found her to be very interesting.

And also Feby, she found that Young is a typical of man that she always wanted for her life partner. Mature, caring, hardworking, and a man who has a clear purpose of his life. And along with all the pluses, they have a same hobby, they love travelling (and eating, not to mention) ;). No wonder, whenever they have spare time amidst their business, they will grab fast their bags and go somewhere.

Somewhere during our conversation, as they shared their stories, I said to them how lucky they are to have each other as a company. But they just looked at each other an smiled to me. They told me, along with the wonderful things they love about each other, and along with the things they shared in common, there are also times when things get rough in their relationship. There are so many things that feels like doesn't fit at all, the more they know each other deeper, the more they complaints about their differences. And there was a time when they nearly gave up, and thought that their relationship was not going to work.

And this is the key that they want to share with us. It is true, Love give you a beautiful power of giving, when you love someone you start to give whatever you can to make sure the happiness of the person you love. But sometimes we forget that love is not all about giving, but also about accepting. We must accept the differences and all the things that are not so ourselves, the things that we think are very strange and make us want to say "Arrrghhh". But when we start to accept each other, this is actually the time when we minimize our "me" and let love grow even stronger.

"...sometimes we forget that love is not all about giving, but also about accepting"

story of Michael & Karina

GOD KNOWS AND PROVIDED

words by Karina

photos by Artha The

People often wonder, how do you know for sure that you have made the right decision, that he is truly the one meant for you? That is a difficult question to answer but I am one of the lucky ones to know for sure that my life partner is truly the ONE because our wedding day is filled with miracles and that's how we are sure that we are meant for each other because God's favor was upon us.

Both Mike and I fell in love with Bali and its natural beauty. We even had our pre wedding pictures taken in Bali. An intimate outdoor Bali wedding filled with our dearest friends and families truly was our dream wedding. However, a beautiful outdoor wedding doesn't come without caveats. During our wedding planning, we even moved our wedding date because we were worried about the rain.

We moved it to end of May, hoping that by then there will be no more rain and bad weathers. Then on H-1 it was raining so bad in the morning and afternoon that we couldn't do rehearsal at the wedding location. However, in the evening God made the sky so clear and beautiful just in time for our H-1 photo and video session. Our photos and video turned out to be so beautiful! That was miracle number 1.

On that day too, our Pastor from Jakarta suddenly called us and asked us to move the Holy Matrimony schedule earlier because she needed to be back to Jakarta to attend another wedding. We were surprised and confused on how to change the itinerary schedule on such a last minute basis but we believe that it is never wrong to do the right thing, so we managed to try to accommodate for the change in schedule.

Because H-1 weather was so bad, we checked the weather forecast and it was said that there was going to be a thunderstorm the whole day from morning to night during the wedding date. WO informed us that we will need to decide whether we want to use the ballroom as backup or stick to outdoor with risk of rain. If we don't decide quickly, there will not be enough time to move the décor to the ballroom. And if it was going to rain from morning, the decor team also won't be able to work and finish the decor.

And then later on at 11 pm, when my family was praying for tomorrow we realized that the villa was flooded ! There was a heavy thunderstorm that night and both of Mike and my villa was flooded because the rain was too big. My sister's dress got wet due to the flooding. Then at 2 am, my family was evacuated to another villa. When most bride-to- be would have had their beauty sleep, I had to bring my bags and moved to a new room.

Still ,we didn't lose hope. Some people suggested us to use rain stopper which is a common practice for most Bali wedding but Mike and I refused. I wouldn't lie that I was tempted at some point because I was too scared that it would rain, but I stick to my firm faith because I believe my God is more powerful than anything on earth.

I woke up on my wedding date the next day at 6am, then sit alone at a gazebo outside the villa overlooking the ocean. There was a giant dark cloud above and as I pray at the gazebo, I was watching the dark cloud moved toward the ocean. With my own eyes, I watched my God at work. He moved the rain away. That morning while I was watching the cloud, it was still raining. But at around 7 am when it was time to start make up and everything, God had moved all the dark clouds away. The sky was truly clear and beautiful. And that was miracle number 2.

But the problem didn't end there .. when my bridesmaid and make up artists wanted to enter the resort, there was a fire at Ayana main gate and they couldn't enter the vicinity until the fire was cleared. The schedule got delayed, which is bad because we had wanted to move the wedding earlier so that our Pastor can reach Jakarta that night. But we are still thankful that everyone was safe and after all, which bride can tell people that there was both fire and flood during her wedding day ?

The entire day was clear and beautiful, perfect weather for taking photos and video. But it was rather hot and we were worried that it will be too hot for the guests during Holy Matrimony especially because we moved it earlier. Then at around 4pm, just before the Holy Matrimony, the sky turned cloudy. At first I was a bit scared because by then, there was no time to move the reception to the ballroom anymore. We couldn't move the food buffet, let alone the decor.

However, it was perfect weather for Holy Matrimony! The cloud kept the heat and direct sun away yet it didn't rained. There were cool breeze too and it was very comfortable for us and the wedding guests.

Throughout the wedding planning process, one of the most arguable part of our wedding was the timing of the Holy Matrimony. Most people say that having it at 4.30pm will be too hot yet we moved it to even earlier and we wanted a proper celebration of love because we believe Holy Matrimony is truly the essence of the wedding because it was the moment when we will blessed and united as one so we didn't want to cut the session shorter. As selfish human, we neither want rain nor hot sun. But God knows and provided us with what is best for us, beyond our mind and expectation. And after that, until the reception party was done at 10pm miraculously there was not a single rain. That was miracle number 3.

After the party was over, I contacted my Pastor and was informed that my Pastor managed to get a last minute ticket back to Jakarta at the airport. She flew back that night from Bali and still managed to attend another wedding at Mulia Jakarta in good time. And that was miracle number 4.

I am so thankful that I have an almighty God who is also a Father that loves me. His name is Jesus Christ. Thinking back to that day, wedding day is just a few hours celebration. Yes, we want it to be perfect because it is a once in a lifetime chance and the pretty photos will look nice hanging in our new home. But having God's presence on the day that we got united as one is more important and I can't be more thankful to God for the miracles that He performed.

NUMEROUS POSSIBILITIES TO TASTE LOVE

words by Amel Leo

photos by Amel Leo

God is great in anything, including planning small surprises in our lives and providing us with a true blessing called love. We may easily think that it is not a good time, or even a good place to fall in love, but if He provided it for us, it means that everything is and will be good.

For Eko & Medi, maybe they thought that their first meeting was in a condition that they've never expected before. Maybe the timing was not perfect, or maybe it was just not the place where you would expect love. But from the beginning Eko knew very well that Medi is the answer from heaven for each of his prayer. They let their hearts stand before their minds, and the spark they felt at first sight led them to the taste love.

Love is everywhere. We may just find it right in a corner or in a place that we've never thought of before. Just follow the gentle voice that speaks to our heart, because if we open our eyes and heart, we will find numerous possibilities to taste love.

"From the beginning Eko knew very well that Medi is the answer from heaven for each of his prayer."

"I never told you this before, but although I was not a strong Christian at that time. God told me to pursue you.

I was sitting in church at JLCC, and instead of thinking about God, I was thinking about you. And at that moment, pastor Paul said the most bizarre thing that you would ever hear in sermon in front of thousand people, 'If you like the girl, then go for it!

When we went through challenging times in the beginning, I felt a strong nudge from the Holy Spirit to persevere, that there will be a reason for us to be together... And later the greatest of all miracles, I heard from God, you heard from God, and with God's grace upon our lives, we heard the calling to press reset on ourselves as individuals, and on our relationship, to be in his ways. And we never turned back."

Kevin

"Today is the day that I've waited for my entire life. And I want to thank you for pursuing the heart of God in order to find me."

"God know the time, just like how he has crafted the day we met at the sushi restaurant."

"Kevin, for where you go, I will go. Where you stay I will stay. Until death do us part. I promise to forgive the times when you get on my nerves, laugh, and cherish the present moments with you. And hang on to hope for the future ahead of us."

RACING WHEELS

story of Ramli & Ayu

ONE HUNDRED ROSES

words by Gita Lesmana

photos by Klaus Khan

Time is the biggest teacher, also the greatest proof in human life. Only time could test something and tell its purity. Because most of the times, something fake would fall out in the middle.

Ramli and Ayu met in their high school exams, they saw each other a lot, and they started to chat on the phone. Not much time needed, they decided to grow a relationship and Ayu was very happy with that. She had a serious lovestruck with Ramli. But the sweet relationship only lasted for 3 months. Ayu and Ramli never talked to each other since. Ayu felt that there was something hollow in her heart, knowing she still had strong feelings towards that guy, but the fact was Ramli didn't care at all. Ayu tried to move on, it was even harder since Ramli's mother sometimes still showed some love to Ayu.

When they graduated from high school, Ayu heard a news that Ramli would go to China to pursue college. Ayu felt that hollowness inside her heart again as she knew that Ramli would go further than before. She claimed to herself that this was the time to really move on and open her heart to another man. She did it.

Three years went by… Ayu still somehow kept memories about Ramli deep inside her heart even though she had another boyfriend to love. Every day was ordinary for Ayu - she lived her life as usual and never expected anything from anyone. Till one day..

September 2013. One fine day, Ramli's sibling chatted with Ayu in the middle of an unknown situation. Then Ayu made the courage to ask for Ramli's number - and she contacted him. Ramli changed a lot, he is now wiser and be more mature. But Ayu didn't really pursue him seriously since she already had a boyfriend.

Day after day, they kept chatting with one another and finally Ayu surrendered. She couldn't hide her feelings no more, and she felt guilty towards her current boyfriend. So Ayu broke the relationship and strenghtened her mind to follow her heart. She chose Ramli.

But Ayu is a smart woman, she wanted Ramli to proof his love by asking him to bring 100 pieces of roses with five different colors. Guess what, he did it! Now Ayu knows why after all of these years she couldn't really love another man. Ramli was always the reason.

"Ramli teaches me what true love is, and dealing with broken heart. With him, I've already gone through so many seasons. But whatever is going on, I know that he is the one for me." Ayu.
